

LEEFIELD
— STATION —

Nothing by halves

Waihopai Valley, Marlborough, New Zealand

Situated in the Waihopai Valley of Marlborough, New Zealand, Leefield Station is a magical place where the drive, tenacity and vision of its owners, past and present have created a remarkable working farm and vineyard.

Today, while vineyards line the valley of Marlborough, pockets of sheep and beef farming can still be seen, along with a few fruitful orchards and beehives. Leefield Station, under the care of the Marris family, brings all of these important elements together with a mission to showcase the best of Marlborough in one amazing property.

Multiple varieties of delicious grapes, plus well-kept sheep, cattle, and pigs – all alongside flourishing native bush sheltering productive beehives and teeming flora and fauna. It is nature co-existing perfectly – helping each other, thriving together, in an amazing eco-system of its own. This is what modern farming looks like.

“I see Leefield Station as an integrated vineyard and farm park, a real icon of the district that becomes a showcase property for Marlborough and New Zealand”
– Brent Marris

Waihopai Valley, Marlborough, New Zealand

An Iconic Symbol of Marlborough

Born of the Waihopai Valley, The Ned represents the vibrant diversity that is so prevalent in the Marlborough wine-growing region. One of Marlborough's famous peaks, The Ned mountain served as the playground for Marisco founder, Brent Marris, during his youth. The ethos "Young At Heart" encapsulates this wine; a true expression of grassroots winemaking that places the energy and liveliness of adventure in every bottle.

Marlborough, New Zealand

New Zealand is known for its pristine, dramatic beauty and distinctive flora and fauna. Fernlands Sauvignon Blanc captures the essence of New Zealand purity – like the rivers that flow through the mountains and forests.

